

MDwise

A McLaren Company

ADHD and Hyperactivity

Table of Contents

- Overview
- Credits

Overview

What is hyperactivity when a person has ADHD?

Hyperactivity refers to inappropriate or excessive activity for a person's age or situation. Hyperactivity is not always a continuous behavior, as is often assumed. A person who has ADHD with hyperactivity as the main symptom may only sometimes be overactive. If a person has the primarily inattentive type of ADHD, they may even seem less active than normal.

What are the symptoms?

Children may have more obvious symptoms of hyperactivity than teens and adults. Children whose main symptom is hyperactivity seem to be "on the go" much of the time or act as if "driven by a motor." Behavior may range from subtle to extreme. For example, a child may squirm in chairs at times, and then at other times be completely unable to stay seated. Children with hyperactivity also frequently climb and run around when it is not appropriate.

Hyperactivity may be less obvious as people with ADHD mature, but they usually still struggle with symptoms. For example, teens and adults may be fidgety. Some adults say they feel restless even when they do not show it.

Some symptoms are common in all age groups, such as talking excessively or having difficulty doing quiet activities.

Credits

Current as of: June 16, 2021

Author: Healthwise Staff

Medical Review:

Adam Husney MD - Family Medicine

Kathleen Romito MD - Family Medicine

Louis Pellegrino MD - Developmental Pediatrics

Note: The "printer friendly" document will not contain all the information available in the online document. Some information (e.g. cross-references to other topics, definitions or medical illustrations) is only available in the online version.

This information does not replace the advice of a doctor. Healthwise, Incorporated, disclaims any warranty or liability for your use of this information.

© 1995-2022 Healthwise, Incorporated. Healthwise, Healthwise for every health decision, and the Healthwise logo are trademarks of Healthwise, Incorporated.